You can know more about our website :Over the years, the portrayal of DJ culture and DJs has slowly evolved from nerdy and relatively unknown to mainstream popularity and respectability, with widespread recognition and ever growing appreciation of the importance of DJs and the culture surrounding them.

At its core, however, the role of the DJ is often misunderstood and many still view the role as almost mythical, as we have claimed in our series of books, with iconic status. Even among DJs, there is a tendency to think of the role through the lens of gigs, classic versus new music, or the high-end versus the low-end clubs. Outside of that, what's generally assumed about the role of the DJ is that the music is a secondary influence on the rest of the night, as for example, a DJ might not be present at a party, but it wouldn't really matter all that much if he was, so long as everyone else had a good time. In fact, many people seem to forget that the sole purpose of the DJ is to make sure that the music plays, whether they're playing it themselves or not. Within the DJ community, a common refrain is "the DJ is the most important person at the party," which becomes a kind of self-perpetuating lie that many people cling to, especially when they're under the impression that they are really the most important person at the party, who the party is for them. Some people might even say that the DJ is the true spiritual leader of the party, which is a false claim, because the party is not for them, it is for the partygoers. When we speak of the DJ as the most important person at the party, what we're really saying is that the person who is hosting the party is the most important person at the party.
